Coblr Text Message Opt-In & Consent Description

This document explains how Coblr obtains customer consent to receive text message (SMS) notifications in two distinct workflows: mail-in service requests and in-store repair orders. In both cases, text messages are optional and are sent only after the customer has affirmatively opted in. Text messages sent under these workflows are limited to transactional notifications about the customer's repair order (e.g., status updates, completion notifications).

1. Mail-In Service Request Workflow (Website)

Repair shops using Coblr embed an order-intake widget on their website. Customers use this form to submit a repair request for a mail-in service.

Process:

- The intake form collects details about the item being repaired, the requested service, and the customer's contact information.
- As part of the form, customers are presented with an optional checkbox to opt in to receive text message notifications related to their order.
- The checkbox is not pre-selected and requires an affirmative action by the customer.
- If the customer checks the box and submits the form, Coblr records the customer's consent to receive text messages about order updates.
- If the customer does not opt in, Coblr records the customer's decision to opt-out of receiving text messages about order updates and no text messages are sent.

Existing Customers:

- Staff may look up an existing customer by email address or phone number.
- If the customer already has a phone number on file, the system clearly indicates whether the customer has opted in or out of text message communications.
- Text messages are sent only if the customer has previously provided consent.

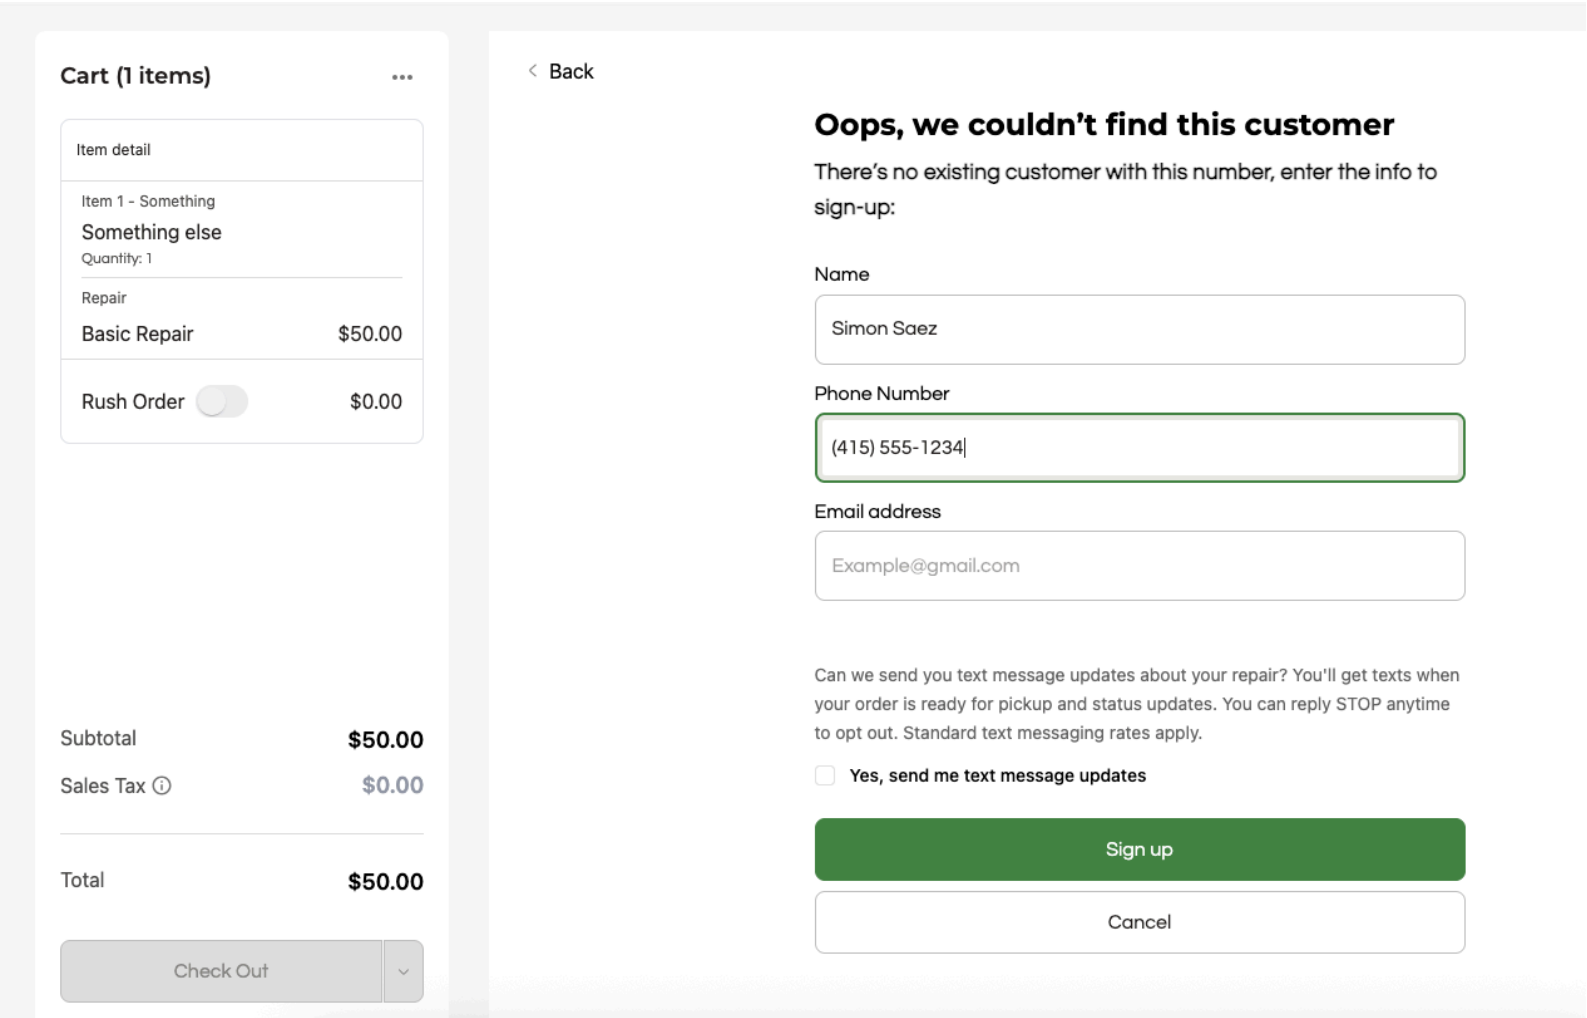
New Customers:


- If the customer is new, they are prompted to sign up during order creation.
- During sign-up, the customer provides their phone number and/or email address to receive order updates.
- When a phone number is entered, a text message consent checkbox is displayed.
- The customer must affirmatively select the checkbox to opt in to receive text message notifications.
- Consent status is saved to the customer record and is visible for future orders.
